Y. W. C. A. School in Which Women Are Taught to Wait Upon Invalids Where Nurses Are Too Costly or Unnecessary.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL New York, July 8 .- A school of unusual interest, because it opens up a new and se far uncrowded profession for women, is that which trains attendants for the sick. Under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association, several classes meet every day and evening in the Y. W. C. A. building in Fifteenth street. Visitors would at first glance imagine themserves in one of the large hospital training schools. Under the supervis of Miss Grace Henderson, a graduate nurse of the New York Hospital, girls in neat blue uniforms, with white aprons, neat blue uniforms, with white aprons, are busily engaged in making bandages and learning how to apply them. There are also clauses in invalid cooking and in general information about the sick and the care of the sickroom.

For the girl who finds herself in need of employment, but is at a loss what to do, this work is especially recommended, for it requires no talent aside from good health and good common sense. With these two requisites, together with average ability, a student will be able to graduate with a ten weeks' course. And this new work is an equally good thing for the public, for a trained attendant is to be had at a fee ranging according to the case, from $7$ to $15$ a week. In addition to her regular duties she is taught to read case, from $7 to $15 a week. In addition to her regular duties she is taught to read well, to talk cheerfully and to make herself generally agreeable.

The trained attendant is a product of the last few years and is the result of a crying need—that of a sort of middle nurse to fill the gap between the convalescence and complete recovery of the well-to-do patient, and to assume the duties of regular nurse in families where a regular nurse cannot be afforded. As has often been argued, the advent of the trained nurse has benefited chiefly the two opposite extremes of society—the very rich and the very poor.

GREAT UN-NURSED CLASS.

GREAT UN-NURSED CLASS. There still remains a great un-nurse middle class which cannot afford the fee of the professional nurse, and to whom the services of the district nurse are de

In all large cities there are blocks and blocks of houses filled with flats where there is no extreme poverty, but where the professional price of from $\mathbb{E}$ to $\mathbb{E}$ a day for a trained nurse, in addition to finding a room and boarding her, is too much of a drain upon the exchequer. In such homes as these, the trained attendant, with her cheerful face, practical skill and moderate fee, is a blessing and more than welcome.

For the girl who has ambition to become a trained nurse and is handicapped because of inefficient education, the profession of trained attendant, which is like fession of trained attendant, which is like and yet not that of regular nurse, is especially attractive. The majority of large hospitals in New York and most of the large Eastern cities have raised the standard of education to such an extent that a young woman who has been deprived of a high-school education cannot aspire to become a pupil nurse, however well she may be fitted by nature to take up the work. If she is ambitious, however, and capable, she may bring up the remuneration of trained attendant to almost that of a regular trained nurse, aithough there is no comparison as to the respective training, for one extends over a period of three years and the other less than three months.

The young man in chambers and the young woman in her tiny flat are subject to ailments like the rest of mankind. Thousands of them are living practically alone in New York, without relatives or near friends to help them when they fall ill, and they cannot afford to either house a professional nurse or to pay her price. Many of these, with a natural shrinking from a hospital, are grateful for the services of a trained attendant who lives in her own place and attends by the day or week.

FIRST SCHOOL ESTABLISHED. It was to give this class of women and giris an opportunity, and also to supply the demand for trained attendants, that a training school was first established in Boston under the auspices of the Y. W. C.

A. The venture proved such a success and the demand for the trained attendant graduates became so great that other schools were opened, and now tourself, and most efficient is in You Brooklyn. In comparate in the propertunities for advancement, have much better opportunities for advancement, have more leisure time and are also better remunerated. In fact, more than half the graduates are girls who have taken up other lines of work in New York, but have given them up &n favor of nursing. Girls from good families, who have been unable to take the three years' course in a hospital, are taking up this work and are finding it congenial.

Applicants for admission to the school must understand that the position of trained and the country hope to become trained nurses by taking this course alone. An attendant cannot charge as mich as a trained nurse, nor may she be expected to assume the entire duties of one. The training class is open only to women who are working for self-support. RAORDINARY SALE OF CA M RUGS, OILCLOTHS, L

On June 28th the sprinkler pipes on our third floor blew off and caused considerable damage to our stock of Carpets, Rugs, Oilcloths and Linoleums. Some rolls were soaked with water -others escaped with only a few drops-and still others apparently were not damaged at all. Our policy at all times, however, is to show only absolutely perfect qualities-these Carpets, Rugs, Oilcloths, etc., are therefore only in the way and must be closed out at once.

Our loss has been adjusted with the insurance companies, and beginning to-morrow we will place all these goods on sale at prices that will sell them with a rush. Read the offerings and come just as quickly as you possibly can.
